Supported by a comprehensive transportation network, ready-to-develop sites and reliable infrastructure, Northwest Ohio has established itself as a leading region for the energy industry. That diversity of transportation includes a growing high-pressure pipeline system connecting the region to a vast supply of natural gas across the country. In the 17-county region, Northwest Ohio produces nearly every type of energy, including petroleum, natural gas, solar, wind, nuclear and biofuels. The region features four major refineries and a complete supply chain from drilling to production.

The availability of plentiful, low-cost natural gas makes our refinery more cost competitive in the world market. The Toledo area market is well-supplied by pipelines from gas production fields, storage fields, and is on the crossroads between market areas. As a result, Toledo enjoys stable prices even during cold weather."

- Alan King, Senior Director, Toledo Refining Company
